... and then, how to get a 3D printer to do the rest. :P A: Your question is short and to the point, concise and clear. In any case, I decided to add some thoughts to your question. If not related to computer science, your question can be illustrated in different ways. For example: Kinetic Sculptures: Life Cycle of a Still Life Painting - an interesting experiment with the notion of life cycle of a painting. The artist is using computer to extend the life cycle of an original still life painting. You can download the still life painting here. As you can see, it is still life but it is going to have a different life cycle. Yet, in this 3D model, the artist used software to create a reproduction version of a painting, in which art is done the same but with new technological tools. In your question, the sculpture is done manually. On the contrary, in this sculpture, the artist is using computers to generate a sculpture, which is actually, a reproduction of a sculpture. Another example of the sculpture you are talking about: Objects With Genetic Algorithms As you can see, in both, the sculptors are using gene to construct their products. In one case, using 3D modeling software, and in the other case, using software that deals with genetics. I decided to create a new model to illustrate this point. As you can see, it is very simple. In this model, the artist is using 3D modelling software to design the object. In one case the artist is using the software, in the other case the software uses the artist. In my opinion, it is very interesting to examine your questions and your model as I have done above. Hydro-steam-radiotherapy for unresectable hepatocellular carcinoma. Previous studies on treatment options in unresectable hepatocellular carcinoma (HCC) have emphasized the adverse effects of radical treatments. To treat patients with HCC without a large main tumor, hydro-steam-radiotherapy (H-SRT) was performed. After transcatheter arterial embolization (TAE) of the main tumor, a main tumor locus (Tm) was defined as the leading point of tumor feeding artery, which was approximately 0.5-1 cm from the TAE-irradiated main tumor

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the U.S.A. was instituted in the 1960s and amended to its present form in 1967 by the Universal House of Justice. It is given international responsibility by that body for coordinating, making decisions and reporting on the activities of Baha'is world-wide. Its President, The National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the U.S.A. is a self-perpetuating body, i.e., it is composed entirely of Baha'is, and is elected by the Baha'is of the U.S.A. The National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'i Faith is a non-governmental, non-political, international, non-sectarian non-profit organisation which is a member of the United Nations. It was called to exist when in the late 1930s Baha'is faced a series of legal challenges in the United States that would eventually limit their right to publish religious texts.
