You can download it in a free version from the official site.Wearable device helps bald losers stay cool on long Florida hikes Florida is, by nature, hot and humid. Combine that with a summertime hike, and the air feels like a sauna. That's where a wearable device might come in handy: a waterproof sleeve filled with pads to cool off a sweaty body. If you're on a hike somewhere with no AC, you're going to be sweating a lot. Add any number of other factors—bugs, ticks, a bug infested tent—and dehydration is a real threat. While a napkin won't do the trick on the go, a wearable device might do some good. That's one of the innovations coming out of the University of Central Florida in recent years. The researchers have identified a problem faced by hikers everywhere: carrying an AC is a pain in the tush. And that's not just a result of heavy loads, either. The University of Florida's team found that a backpack that weighs under 10 pounds is
